Yoga at home and in the workplace

Dear Friend,

Summer is in the air and anything is possible. Sunsets after 9pm give us another four hours of light to walk and be outside. The morning sun pops up about 6am, adding even more light to our day. This season also brings showers and lightning that add to the touch of the divine.

Thus, this time of year the energy seems to flow in abundance. It opens us up to being with nature and the new growth from Spring. There's no need for coats, hats and gloves; just a tank tops and shorts..... it all seems so carefree.

I find that this environment helps me balance my dominant pitta dosha, which carries with it a natural inclination to be solid and grounded, stable and steady. The extended hours, giving us light, energy, and more freedom, help me be a little more open, more fully engaged instead of retreating, and more merged with nature.

It also helps me let go of the "accomplishment" side of myself. I find I can begin to flow with the moment and become more mindful, experiencing what is in front of me instead of what the future might hold or what happened in the past. Even the breath is a little lighter and freeing.

I hope you all can feel this "Summer" energy in your blood and in your heart. Let's all fill ourselves to the brim with the wonder and awe that covers the earth this time of year and take the time to explore our world.

Namaste,

Ron Collins

Morning Sadhana

"Sadhana" means daily spiritual practice and setting time aside early in the morning can add a positive, full impact on the rest of our day. Our personal sadhana can be anything that we choose. It can be as simple as stopping for a moment and feeling grateful for what we have and to be alive, or it can be a complex practice with time for prayer, exercise, meditation, pranayama, and more. Sadhana is our time to follow our intentions and prepare the mind, body, and soul to flow with ease.

A more complex morning sadhana can be any combination of yoga asanas, meditation, and pranayama, or for more advance yogis, a free-flowing combination of all of them. It can be noisy or it can be silent.

For those of you beginning a fuller morning sadhana practice, I would recommend two specific movement sequences that can offer you the greatest impact.

Sun Salutation A (Surya Namaskara A)

Sun Salutation A is a series of 12 asanas, starting and ending in a standing mountain pose plus one final step. There are several different sun salutations, depending on the culture, but I find this sequence all encompassing. As you move through this series, focus on breathing in and out through the nose. This focus on the breath also helps keep you in in the moment as well as in a rest and relaxation mode. Remember to work within your own range of ability. There's no need to go to the edge.

Mountain pose - stand with feet hip distance apart; bring your palms together in front of the heart center with the thumbs touching the chest

Upward salute – inhale, releasing the palms; arms float out to the side and arch up over your head; bring palms together; allow a slight back bend, about 15 degrees; exhale, returning to full Mountain pose

Standing forward fold – inhale, releasing the palms; arms swan dive as you bend at the waist, bending the knees slightly; the chest drifts toward the thighs; hands continue towards the floor, landing either on your shins or, if comfortable, beside the feet on the floor; exhale, moving your forehead toward the thighs

Half standing forward fold – inhale, moving the torso up halfway with a flatback, lengthening the spine forward; torso forms a 90° angle with your legs; exhale the fingertips to your shins

Forward lunge – inhale, firmly placing your hands on either side of your left foot bringing the right foot back into a full lunge; back leg is straight, the knee is off the ground, and the toes are up and active; exhale as you feel the stretch in the right upper thigh

Downward facing dog – inhale, bringing your left foot back to match the right foot, allowing the sit bones to rise toward the sky; pushing into the palms; exhale, allowing the chest to drop down toward the floor and feel the stretch in the legs

Plank – inhale, sliding forward into a plank with arms extended; push into the palm pads; keep a straight line between the crown of the head and heels of your feet; exhale, slowly lowering the body to the floor, keeping the elbows in; when on the floor, relax and take a breath

Cobra – Inhale; with the toenails on the floor and the lower half of the body relaxed, place the hands beside the chest; began to lift the chest upward using the back muscles and not the arms for support; for an added variation, isometrically drag the hands back toward the body allowing the chest to open a little more; exhale, bringing the chest back to the floor

Downward facing dog – inhale, pushing up with knees and hands into downward facing dog; exhale as you hold

Forward lunge – inhale, swinging the right foot up underneath the chest, positioning your foot between your hands; exhale, bringing yourself to a full forward lunge with left leg extended

Standing forward fold – inhale, bringing the left foot forward to match the right; hang forward with legs slightly bent into the standing forward fold; exhale as you engage the core before your next move

Mountain pose – inhale, moving through a reverse swan dive as the arms go out to the side, the palms meet over the crown of your head and are drawn down the center line to your heart center; exhale, allowing the thumbs to drift toward the chest and the heart to reach out to meet the thumbs

Scan body – inhale, looking inward and scanning the physical body for sensations; exhale, scanning the emotional body; inhale, focusing on the breath; exhale, bringing your attention to the mind; take 3 deep rounds of breath and determine if anything has changed in these four planes since you began this sun salutation

This sun salutation has now engaged many body parts, begun the flow of the synovial fluid that is building strength within the muscles, and activated the spine to keep it supple. This series could be repeated several times to make it more of a workout and stretch, or you could move on to Dasha Chalana to help lubricate additional joints and gain some enhanced stretching.

Dasha Chalana (Eight Churnings) – Standing Joint Series

There is a group of preparatory practices in the hatha yoga texts known as the Dasha Chalana or "eight churnings." These foundational practices, integrated at the beginning of a session, or at the beginning of the day, free the flow of life force in the joints, reduce tension in the internal organs, and cultivate a mind-set conducive to one's yoga practice. The benefits and practice description can be found in the self-care articles on my website.

Meditation is often added to morning sadhanas but the above is a lot to move through at the beginning. A full self-care article on meditation will be coming soon.
